Overview: By its very nature, most child sexual assaults occur in private, that is without witnesses to the crime and occur when there is some kind of relationship between the offender and the victim. Victims may wait before reporting the crime to the police. These circumstances may make it very difficult to successfully prosecute the offender for his crimes.

This course will explore the ways of determining when a victim or witness delays reporting due to fear, anger, shame, guilt, and psychological and physical trauma. Also covered in depth are various investigative techniques including pretext telephone calls, search warrant applications, victim interviews, compliant victims of sexual assault, late reported sexual assaults, case preparation to present for prosecution. Particular attention is given to investigation of “late reported” sexual assaults. Along with sexual assaults, Internet crimes against children will be discussed and how to handle those investigations.
